

A new sound of Hope

Making music is a way to express emotions, both joy and sorrow. In Tamatave, Madagascar, many children carry deep emotional wounds after the devastating cyclone that destroyed their lives. Through singing, they find comfort and connection, but opportunities to develop their musical talents are limited, even though many of these children are highly musical.

How wonderful would it be if we could provide these children with music instruments? Enough adults are willing to teach them how to play, but the instruments are missing. Music can help bring healing, restoration, and renewed hope.

In addition, music is also a powerful way to worship God. By singing together and making music for Him, these children can experience that there is joy and hope in Him, even after everything they have endured.

For $ 6,000, we can purchase guitars, bongos, drums, a piano, and recording equipment. Will you help? Perhaps together with your church, Sunday school group, or choir?
